

refugee

by Arianna Vettorazzi

Abstract:

"Huc pauci vestris adnavimus oris.

Quod genus hoc hominum?

Quaeve hunc tam barbara morem

permittit patria?

Hospitio prohibemur harenae; bella cient primaque vetant consistere terra.

Si genus humanum et mortalia temnitis arma, at sperate deos memores fandi atque nefandi."

"A few of us swam here to your shores.

What kind of people are these?

What country allows such barbaric customs? That denies us even the hospitality of the sand; that declares war on us, and forbids us to come to rest nearby.

If you fear mankind and the weapons of the mortals, believe at least in the gods, mindful of the just and the unjust."

(Publi Vergili Maronis, Aeneidos, Liber I, 538-543)

(Virgil, Aeneid, Book I, 538-543)

This entry explores the term 'refugee', focussing on the multifaceted construct of identity. Specifically, it will analyse how identity is initially formed on the recognition of an intrinsic common foundation to all human beings, and then how it is constructed 'from the outside', where cracks occur within this common foundation and other layers of political identity emerge to divide and often legitimise forms of discrimination against refugees.

These aspects remain constant in the way refugees are interpreted as being different, and make up for underlying components in the mediation of power dynamics that refugees are subject to.

It is by no means possible to exhaust the identity of refugees in a single category, culture or time period. The attempt of this entry is to offer a collection of viewpoints, narratives, inputs from different cultural and historical contexts, mainly through poetry and visual arts, in order to identify the similarities between them, whereby the contrast indicated above is particularly outstanding.

Etymology:

Rifugiato: individuo che, per ragioni essenzialmente politiche, ma anche economiche e sociali, è costretto ad abbandonare lo Stato di cui è cittadino e dove risiede, per cercare rifugio in uno Stato straniero. [...]"

(Source: Enciclopedia Treccani Online: <https://www.treccani.it/enciclopedia/ricerca/rifugiato/>)

Refugee: 1680s, "one who flees to a refuge or shelter or place of safety"; one who in times of persecution or political disorder flees to a foreign country for safety," from French refugié, a noun use of the past participle of refugier "to take shelter, protect," from Old French refuge "hiding place," from Latin refugium "a taking refuge; place to flee back to," from re- "back" (see re-) + fugere "to flee" [...].

(Source: Online Etymology Dictionary: <https://www.etymonline.com/word/refugee>)

Problematization:

"[A]ny uprooted, homeless, involuntary migrant who has crossed a frontier and no longer possesses the protection of his or her former government. [...]"

(Source: Encyclopedia Britannica: <https://www.britannica.com/topic/refugee>)

In this definition, it emerges clearly how being a refugee cannot be an act of choice (as it can be that of an immigrant, for instance). It is rather an involuntary condition which consists in the deprivation of aspects of human life that are necessary to make it endurable as well as meaningful in a number of different ways, and the search for a safe place to live as a consequence of that. In light of this, two aspects of this word can be identified.

On the one hand, being a refugee is a condition that transcends the culture, nationality, place of origin, religion and so on of the individual, and just concerns them as "bodies" and as "human beings".

On the other hand, it is a political status, which is subject to the rule of law:

"In contrast to earlier international refugee instruments, which applied to specific groups of refugees, the 1951 Convention endorses a single definition of the term "refugee" in Article 1. The emphasis of this definition is on the protection of persons from political or other forms of persecution. A refugee, according to the Convention, is someone who is unable or unwilling to return to their country of origin owing to a well-founded fear of being persecuted for reasons of race, religion, nationality, membership of a particular social group, or political opinion"

(Source: <https://www.unhcr.org/media/28185>)

These two perspectives are intertwined and influence each other in the meaning of this word, as well as in the consequences and the relations of power that are linked to it.

In other words, the focus lies on the contrast between the need for a safe haven from danger and distress, as a fundamental precondition for leading a (human) life, and the political and social repercussions of holding refugee status from a legal standpoint. These aspects are always present in the way refugees are construed as being different, albeit to distinct and varied extents, and often constitute the underlying elements of divergence in the negotiation of power dynamics that come into place in the definition of their identity.

"Even though these bodies are deeply political, in that they emerge at the intersection of corporeal and geopolitical relations of power between the West and the global South, they lack civic status; their dehumanisation is, in this sense, an effect of these very power relations that claim to sustain them as human bodies, in the first place (Ticktin, 2011)." [Chouliaraki, Stolic; 2017].

Before moving onto the next section, it is important to make clear the key distinctions between the terms 'refugee', 'migrant' and 'asylum seeker' which are often used interchangeably – sometimes on purpose, as will be illustrated in the examples provided further in the text - but which are actually quite distinct.

Migrant – An umbrella term, not defined under international law, reflecting the common lay understanding of a person who moves away from his or her place of usual residence, whether within a country or across an international border, temporarily or permanently, and for a variety of reasons [...].

Asylum seeker – An individual who is seeking international protection. In countries with individualized procedures, an asylum seeker is someone whose claim has not yet been finally decided on by the country in which he or she has submitted it. Not every asylum seeker will ultimately be recognized as a refugee, but every recognized refugee is initially an asylum seeker [...].

(Source: International Organization for Migration (IOM): <https://www.iom.int/key-migration-terms>)

Communication strategies:

In recent years, Italy has been the main gateway for migrants reaching Europe from the African continent as well as Middle Eastern Asia, and has seen a progressively growing number of refugees arriving at the first port of call in the southern coasts.

In attempting to understand how the 'otherness' of refugees is discursively constructed, it is interesting to focus on their representation in the context of Italian media discourse.

In particular, research has shown how they are often represented as dehumanised by means of impersonalisation, passivisation and objectification (Cerase and Lucchesi, 2022), or they are portrayed in a caricatured and derogatory manner, with allusions and implications that label them, purposefully without contextualisation, often as a pretext to assert a political stance on other matters, such as the criticism of institutions, of other European countries, etc. (Materassi and Pezzoli, 2021).

Although the definition of a 'voluntary migrant' and that of a 'forced migrant' is intrinsically blurry, from a legal point of view it is necessary to identify a boundary between the two, in which the subjective right of asylum seekers to find refuge is different from that of other migrants who may have legitimate interest moving to a new country, but are not forced to do so by a constraint of immediate danger.

According to international law, the right to asylum is unconditional because of the protection regulations in place towards people that belong to this specific category [1]. On the contrary, for those who choose to come voluntarily and unforced there should be different bureaucratic procedures to follow.

In Italy this channel of accessible and truly effective procedures to welcome and guarantee economic and social integration to those who come voluntarily is not yet implemented, which leads to a great number of migrants who wish to enter the country regularly, to do so through asylum applications, even though they do not fall into this category. This produces mechanisms of distortion in the reception system, which in turn create and maintain an indefinite 'state of irregularity', as well as altering the asylum application process, which ultimately degenerates into social marginality and the exploitation of these people (Schiavone, 2021).

This can be identified in the social and political discourse reported on the media, where 'refugees' or 'asylum seekers' are often not referred to as such, but fall under the more generic denomination of 'migrant' or 'clandestine' (in Italian: "migranti"; "immigrati", "clandestini") as an undifferentiated population whose specific identification is not known, reported, or given mediatic relevance, thus contributing to creating an 'identity' that is left fluid and vague.

Moreover, this description is usually combined with demeaning vocabulary, generally relating to the animal world, such as 'parasites', 'leeches', 'scroungers sponging off the welfare state' (Perocco and Della Puppa, 2023), or in the expressions such as 'migrants are swarming', "migrants were herded".

These kinds of frames have a twofold effect: on the one hand the legitimization of the status quo, without having to act on the implementation of effective legal measures against these kinds of irregularities, thus perpetuating a system of reception and integration that is fundamentally flawed.

On the other hand, they are instrumental in fostering in the public opinion the fear of a great number of people invading the country, who take advantage of the welfare state whilst causing social distress and being a threat to the political order.

This is however contradicted by the actual data reporting that, in the face of a rapidly growing phenomenon (see the UN High Commission's "Global Trends" report on World Refugee Day, 20 June, 2022), the number of refugees in Europe is rather low compared to the population (a ratio of 5 asylum seekers per 1,000 inhabitants), and that Italy is the country with the lowest number of asylum seekers in Europe.

Another interesting and powerful way the 'otherness' of refugees is portrayed as fluid is identifiable in the water metaphors and measure-words associated with the word 'refugees' (e.g. flood of, influx of, tide of, wave of ~) (LTD Collocation Dictionary, 1997).

Dry land, the human place by definition, that of stability, cities and homes, is contrasted with the instability and unpredictability of water as an element that cannot be grasped, contained and controlled. In this sense, the water-related semantic field is particularly effective in conferring an identity to refugees that seem to lie outside the realm of people and the human consortium, belonging instead to the wilderness of nature.

This is the front page of the Italian left-wing newspaper Il Manifesto published on 3 September 2015, reporting on the Syrian refugee crisis that hit Europe during that period. The caption reads: 'He has no name, he will have no land: this is the shocking image of a little Syrian refugee found dead on the beach in Bodrum, Turkey, after yet another shipwreck in the Mediterranean [...].' The dead refugee child laying on the shore is presented under the words 'Niente asilo', whereby 'niente' means 'nothing, none' and 'asilo' means both 'asylum' and 'kindergarten, nursery': an intentionally shocking pun, which aims to provoke insufferable feelings of injustice in the viewer.

The horrifying picture taken by a Turkish press photographer in this case deliberately brings the tragic implications of this dehumanized and impersonal identity to its climax: the face of the little one is not visible, the photo anonymously captures his body from behind, against the background of the open sea. Here, such a controversial and appalling image (made worse by the fact that we are looking at a dead child) interacts with the two-word provoking headline (which reinforces the reference to childhood) in a jarring way, playing on the emotional appeal, as it immediately arouses emotions of anger and indignation in the mass reader.

The use of images to convey specific meanings and trigger emotions in the viewers has been widely analyzed as, for example, in Susan Sontag's On Photography (1977) where the philosopher discusses both the ethic and the aesthetic elements of the visual impact of photographs and their role in the construction of a specific representation and interpretation of social reality. For more theoretical sources on this, see Media Discourse by Norman Fairclough (1995) and Elements of Semiology by Roland Barthes (1967).

In this case, the underlying intent of the newspaper's front page is to criticise the European Union and its inadequate reception policies for refugees in the face of an emergency (the full article can be found at: <https://ilmanifesto.it/edizioni/il-manifesto/il-manifesto-del-03-09-2015>).

This is achieved by appropriating the political representation of refugees as dehumanized and impersonal, generally belonging to a right-wing political discourse, in order to highlight the unacceptability of this stance by contrast, almost suggesting that this child's tragic death is the result of treating refugees not like all other human beings, that is, not granting them the protection and safety they deserve.

To conclude, a further consideration should be made. While the photo purposefully portrays the impersonalization of the little refugee, who then becomes a symbol of all the refugees dead in the migration crossings, the child had a name and a story, which has to be reported and remembered to avoid the risk that turning a human being into a symbol makes us forget his/her individuality and humanity.

The little boy was called Alan Kurdi [2], he was a Syrian refugee that, together with his family, was trying to reach Europe from Turkey. The Kurdi family had been attempting to enter Canada to join their relatives in Vancouver, but after they were denied the application for the asylum and thus an exit visa from Turkey, Alan's father relied on a people smuggler to reach the Greek island of Kos. Several people lost their lives in that trip aboard an inflatable boat, and after the incident made the headlines throughout the world, the identified perpetrators were detained with charges of human trafficking.

Subversion:

In this section, a selection of examples from poetry and visual discourse aims to provide counter-reactions to the political representation of refugees's identity more often than not portrayed as threats or as victims.

Here, the human aspect is made more salient and is critically contrasted with the political and social one, transcending the boundaries of nation, cultural background, state borders, rule of law, etc., to start from the primary condition of being human before any law is applied or enforced on it.

Reflection on the issue of age Gill specifically underlines the refugees endure when it comes to human life that they are deprived

Their passivisation here is not in manner, but rather it is presented

THEY TOOK YOUR HOME FROM YOU NOW THEY CALL YOU REFUGEE

Home is a language
you grew in your mouth
that now no longer exists anywhere
but inside your heart and head.

Home is where you had to teach your children
how to run from men who are dressed in war and blood.

Home is now a legend
a story of where you grew up,
happy and safe before they set your entire world aflame.

Home is where you ran to the sea because the place you once belonged to,
now no longer remembers your name.

Home was your refuge.
Now, after cruelly
taking it from you,
they call you a refugee.

Nikita Gill

The poem "Refugee Blues" by British poet W.H. Auden, was first released in 1939 on the verge of World War Two. It reflects on the condition of Jewish refugees who were compelled to flee Nazi Germany but were unable to find safety abroad (see also "We Refugees" by Hanna Arendt and Giorgio Agamben's comments on the same text).

The poem portrays the agony and suffering of having to flee one's home and being denied basic human rights. Particularly suggestive are those lines in which natural elements, untouched and untouchable by human laws, are posed in stark contrast with the circumstances of the protagonists, a German Jew and his family. As human beings, they belong to this same nature and life, broadly understood, where the only constraints are those of the body (e.g. the need for food, warmth and shelter), and yet they are restrained, discriminated against, persecuted for their 'political' identity.

The contrasts are for example: old yew blossoming anew every spring vs. old passports; the poodle kept warm and the cat let in vs. German Jews left out in the cold; fish swimming free vs. the metaphorical distance of the same freedom for the protagonist; birds in the trees singing at their ease vs. the human race; falling snow vs. soldiers marching looking out for them.

The lines that best capture and emphasise this contrast that is acting out on them, humanity, their home, being tak

Refugee Blues (1939)

Say this city has ten million souls
Some are living in mansions, some Yet there's no place for us, my dear place for us.

Once we had a country and we Look in the atlas and you'll find
We cannot go there now, my dear
now.

In the village churchyard there grow
Every spring it blossoms anew;
Old passports can't do that, my dear can't do that.

The consul banged the table and
'If you've got no passport, you're
But we are still alive, my dear, but Went to a committee; they offered Asked me politely to return next
But where shall we go today, my dear
we go today?

Came to a public meeting; the speaker said:

'If we let them in, they will steal
He was talking of you and me, my dear of you and me.

Thought I heard the thunder run
It was Hitler over Europe, saying
We were in his mind, my dear, and are:

*"If you've got no passport you're officially dead"
But we are still alive, my dear, but we are still alive.*

Jewish refugees from Czechoslovakia being marched away by British police at Croydon airport in March 1939

<https://www.20minutes.fr/culture/1681107-20150907-refugies-artistes-celebrites-appellent-solidarite>

*Saw a poodle in a jacket fasten Saw a door opened and a cat le
But they weren't German Jews, weren't German Jews.
Went down the harbour and sto Saw the fish swimming as if the Only ten feet away, my dear, on Walked through a wood, saw th
They had no politicians and sar
They weren't the human race, n human race.
Dreamed I saw a building with a
A thousand windows and a thou
Not one of them was ours, my c was ours.
Stood on a great plain in the fal
Ten thousand soldiers marched Looking for you and me, my dea me.*

Visual discourse

This is a popular image circula
2015 the year of Europe's refuge

Once again, here refugees are lacking individual identity, fallin reversing their direction, being 1996).

The very strong visual metap down instils an immediate sens
while subtly inviting the spec perspective. The 'victimhood' o in itself, the people are not dro the caption making a point of being refugees, the viewer is make an active choice toward out to catch them.

This documentary-film directed by John Haptas and Kristine Samuelson (2019) shows the case of refugee children in Sweden, suffering from the so called 'resignation syndrome'.

This is a form of complex PTSD, originally identified in Sweden in the 1990s, which affects children and teenagers who have experienced psychological trauma after difficult and protracted relocation processes.

As application for asylum often take a long time to be evaluated before it may be possible to grant them and their family the protection they seek, they withdraw in a state of severe depression and diminished consciousness, as a reaction to the stress and the feeling of hopelessness.

There is solid research surrounding the effect that migration can have on the psychological and socio-cultural wellbeing [3] of human beings, but resignation syndrome seems to be a specific reaction to the trauma of refugees, who in most cases flee from dangerous situations in their country of provenience and are forced to wait, sometimes having to deal with their requests being rejected and issuing appeals over the course of years, before they are granted the legal permission to remain in the new country.

<https://gallerieditalia.com/it/torino/mostre-e-iniziativa/mostre/2023/02/jr-deplace-e-s/>

This picture comes from the exhibition Déplacé•e•s by French photographer JR. The artist uses photography to elicit awareness on human rights and environmental issues: <https://www.jr-art.net/projects>

Among his projects, he made a series of installations that spread awareness about the millions of refugee children around the world.

This is a public art performance held in Piazza San Carlo, Turin, Italy, where hundreds of people took part in bringing five tarpaulins depicting the images of children encountered during visits to refugee camps from Rwanda to Greece as well the image as a young girl from Ukraine.

Drones captured the event, showing how the children's figures collided providing an extraordinary spectacle.

A video from Greece (added on June, 12, 2024)

This video is based on a true story that took place on the Greek island of Lesbos in October 2016. Lesbos is a north Aegean Greek island in which more than 500,000 refugees sought refuge in the period between 2015-2020 and still counting.

In an attempt of the Greek government to incorporate refugees it was decided that children should attend elementary school, but even though they were put in separate classes from the Greek children a number of parents opposed the idea.

This short stop motion film tells the story of Maram, one of those children, a refugee from Yemen, on her first day at school when a group of xenophobic parents blocked her entrance violently, locking the school gate and shouting racist slogans.

Along with other parents who expressed their solidarity, the school teacher tried to stop them and soon the quarrel escalated in front of the shocked Maram until her classmates stepped in and restored things.

It is a story that shows how refugee families seeking the "Land without sorrows and pains" (as they considered Europe to be) instead found themselves staggering in the "Land in between", living in a refugee camp. Yet, it also shows how solidarity can make a change.

The work for the original video was supported by Office of Displaced Designers during their Documentary Film Making workshop in 2017 - <https://www.displaceddesigners.org>

Maram stop motion animation, 5', Arabic with Greek and English subtitles, 2020

Narration, rap: Maram Omar

Direction, script, artwork, photography: Efi Sialeври- Vicky Yiagopoulou

Post production: Alexandros Spathis

Intro ARTWORK: Eleni Rousopoulou

Music: Leonidas Danezos/ Alcalica

Maram ENG

<https://filmfreeway.com/MyMaram>

To know more about the context:

<https://www.timeshighereducation.com/letter-lesvos>

IOW Editorial Board wishes to thank Efi Sialeври and Vicky Yiagopoulou for allowing the reproduction of their video on IOW website.

Discussion:

The ambivalent portrayal and perception of refugees both as victims in need of protection and as threats to the nation order is an interesting starting point for developing the discussion further.

- What image and or idea comes up in your mind when you think of a 'refugee'?
- How do you conceptualize the difference between 'migrant' and 'refugee'?
- How are refugees portrayed by the media in your country? How are they portrayed in other written or visual sources (books, pictures, documentaries, etc.) that you have come across?
- How is the image of the Western world as 'safe' and 'protective' to welcome 'others' that aren't part of it perpetuated?
- In your view, being a refugee is a permanent or a changeable condition? Think of the speech vietnamese actor Ke Huy Quan gave at the 95th Oscars ceremony when receiving the Oscar for best supporting actor (link: <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=EZ1SUKxSAi4>).
- How many different types of 'refugees' can you think of?
- Do you know any refugee? What is their story?
- In italian. Online quiz: "Quanto ne sai dei rifugiati nel mondo?" (<https://www.cartadiroma.org/news/in-evidenza/quiz-quanto-ne-sai-dei-rifugiati-nel-mondo/>)

References/Further Readings:

[1] Refugee Protection: A guide to International Refugee Law: <https://www.unhcr.org/media/refugee-protection-guide->

international-refugee-law-handbook-parliamentarians

[2] More on the Alan's story here: https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Death_of_Alan_Kurdi and in the book "The Boy on the Beach: My Family's Escape from Syria and Our Hope for a New Home" by Tima Kurdi.

[3] See: Ward, C. (1990); See also the research of Prof. John Berry: <https://www.queensu.ca/psychology/people/john-berry>.

- Agamben, G.
http://archive.eclass.uth.gr/eclass/modules/document/file.php/SEAD391/%CE%9C%CE%91%CE%98%CE%97%CE%9C%CE%91%203/Agamben_WeRefugees_1995.pdf
- Arendt, H. We Refugees. <https://amroali.com/2017/04/refugees-essay-hannah-arendt/>
- Barthes, R. (1967). Elements of Semiology. New York: Hill and Wang.
- Cerase, A.; Lucchesi, D. (2022) Noi, "loro" e "quelli": la ricontestualizzazione di popolo, ONG e rifugiati nel discorso sovranista = "We", "them" and "those": the recontextualisation of people, NGOs and refugees in sovereignist discourse H-ermes. Journal of Communication 22 (2022), 229-258
- Chouliaraki L (2006) Towards an analytics of mediation. Critical Discourse Studies 3(2): 153–178.
- Chouliaraki L, Stolic T (2017) Rethinking media responsibility in the refugee 'crisis': a visual typology of European news. Media, Culture and Society 39(8): 1162-1177.
- Enciclopedia Treccani online: https://www.treccani.it/enciclopedia/elenco-opere/Enciclopedie_on_line
- Fairclough, N. (1995). Media Discourse. London: Edward Arnold.
- Malkki LH (1996) Speechless emissaries: refugees, humanitarianism, and dehistoricization. Cultural Anthropology 11: 377–404.
- Materassi, L; Pezzoli, S. (2021) Migranti e rappresentazioni. Linguaggio, integrazione, discriminazione, pp. 169-190, DOI 10.36253/978-88-6453-965-2.09, in Giorgia Bulli, Alberto Tonini (edited by), Migrazioni in Italia: oltre la sfida. Per un approccio interdisciplinare allo studio delle migrazioni.
- Mortensen M and Trenz H-J (2016) Media morality and visual icons in the age of social media: Alan Kurdi and the emergence of an impromptu public of moral spectatorship. Javnost/ThePublic 23: 343–362.
- Perocco, F. and Della Puppa, F. (2023). The Racialized Welfare Discourse on Refugees and Asylum Seekers: The Example of "Scroungers" in Italy. Social Sciences 12: 59. <https://doi.org/10.3390/socsci12020059>.
- RefugiArte: The Refugee Crisis illustrated by Latin American artists: <https://www.unhcr.org/refugiarte/>
- Sallin K, Lagercrantz H, Evers K, Engström I, Hjern A, Petrovic P. Resignation Syndrome: Catatonia? Culture-Bound? Front Behav Neurosci. 2016 Jan 29;10:7. doi: 10.3389/fnbeh.2016.00007. PMID: 26858615; PMCID: PMC4731541.
- Schiavone, G (2021) Video: "Perché 'loro' continuano a venire in Italia?" | "La cura", il Festival 2021 di EMERGENCY", (<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=gE9VmlQGhxE>)
- Sontag, S. (1977). On Photography. New York: Farrar, Straus and Giroux.
- Ticktin M (2011) Casualties of Care: Immigration and the Politics of Humanitarianism in France. Berkeley, CA: University of California Press.
- UNHCR "Convention and Protocol relating to the Status of Refugees"
- Van Dijk T. (1991). Racism and the Press. London: Routledge.
- Ward, C. (1990). "The prediction of psychological and sociocultural adjustment during cross-cultural transitions" – International journal of intercultural relations

How to cite this entry: Vettorazzi, A. (2023). Refugee. In Other Words. A Contextualized Dictionary to Problematize Otherness. Published: 02 June 2023. [<https://www.iowdictionary.org/word/refugee>, accessed: 12 July 2025]