

THE WORDS OF COVID-19: Bulgaria

wave – a second wave – a third wave (Вълна – първа, втора, трета вълна)

by Ivanka Mavrodieva

Abstract:

The word 'wave' has a negative connotation during the pandemic of COVID-19 in Bulgaria. The wave has a figurative meaning, the use of the word gradually becomes a stable tradition in Bulgarian media, institutional statements and colloquial language. The enlarging of the pandemic catalyses the derivation of verbal variants. The use of the word 'wave' started after the first lockdown (13 March – 30 May 2020) in Bulgaria. The use of the word 'second wave' has been appeared in the media discourse in the summer of 2020. The word 'third wave' has been introduced during the autumn of 2020. Media outlets, experts, national institutions, and official organisations use the word 'wave' as a petrified metaphor and as a verbal tool to represent the possibilities for the spread and increase in the number of infected and diseased people. The context is not only medical, but also situational, as it includes social, psychological, economic, and other dimensions that are captured by media discourse.

Думата "вълна" има негативна конотация по време на пандемията от COVID-19 в България. Вълната има преносно значение, като употребата на думата постепенно се превръща в устойчива традиция в българските медии, институционални изявления и разговорен език. Разширяването на пандемията ускорява извеждането на словообразователни варианти. Употребата на думата "вълна" започва след първото затваряне (13 март - 30 май 2020 г.) в България. Употребата на думата "втора вълна" се появява в медийния дискурс през лятото на 2020 г. Думата "трета вълна" е въведена през есента на 2020 г. Медиите, експертите, националните институции и официалните организации използват думата "вълна" като втвърдена метафора и като вербален инструмент за представяне на възможностите за разпространение и увеличаване на броя на заразените и болните хора. Контекстът е не само медицински, но и ситуационен, тъй като включва социални, психологически, икономически и други измерения, които се улавят от медийния дискурс.

Cultural specificity:

The word ‘second wave’ is used in global, national, local/regional context. Bulgarian media inform about pandemic every single day and they present news concerning changes. The competition in media market establishes requirements to inform permanently and it creates negative trend – virus journalism and fast news. Simultaneously media prefer to translate news presented in authoritative media abroad. Journalists understand that credibility is very important factor during the pandemic and they know that people try to find true information and comments by experts.

The first trend: citation and translation of authoritative media.

Problematization:

The word 'вълна' – 'wave' has manifestation in different spheres (science, arts, literature, economy, etc.) and sciences (physics, medicine, engineering, etc.).

The word 'wave' is used in a new context in Bulgaria during 2020 and in the beginning of 2021 and the meaning is the same in comparison with 'stage'.

The word 'wave' has a negative connotation during the pandemic of COVID-19, and in particular, after the first wave (March 2020). Bulgarian media use the word 'second wave' in order to inspire fear of the spread of the virus, by showing an increase in the number of sick and infected people. Journalists present negative results about people's health and business.

Media use comparative and superlative words to present the results of the infected people.

In this example, media prefer to cite experts and scientists presenting the situation but journalists avoid to say their names and the media cite politicians.

It is noteworthy to say that from March 13, 2020, to 10 January 2021 there is frequent use of "wave of COVID-19" in the headlines or subheadings of media publications, radio and television broadcasts, and online posts.

The second wave of COVID-19 will hit the economy even harder.

The media inspire fear, negative consequences for people's health and business. Journalists present examples, such as:

Communication strategies:

The word 'wave' in the pandemic of COVID-19 is used as an application of figurative language. The wave is a rhetorical figure that functions as a metaphor. It is used to show how the fast spread of the virus in different countries, regions, continents as well as its impact on the economy, business, health, and healthcare. The change is the result of various factors: socio-cultural, political, medical, media, etc. In 2020 spring, experts in the field of virology talk about the first wave. In the summer of 2020, medics, statesmen, and journalists will start using the phrase second wave. In the autumn of 2020, there is already a talk about a third wave.

Visualisation of the wave has an association with see wave and flooding and as well as with increasing of disaster.

Connotations

The positive meaning of the word 'wave' is used in music, fine arts, literature, etc.

The word "wave" is used figuratively in a social and political context. For example, a wave of strikes/protests or a wave of public discontent among some groups in society.

The negative significance of the word 'wave' is associated with a health problem and in particular women and climacteric (menopause): cold wave and hot wave as a result of changes of the body. The meaning is a result of deconstruction in a specific national context.

Discussion:

The word 'wave' occurs in the following variants ('wave', 'second wave', 'third wave') in publications on the sites of online media in Bulgaria. The meaning of the expressions has specific use and it relates to an extension of the infection of COVID-19. The aim of the use of three variants is to name the process of enlarging of COVID-19 in Bulgaria and in particular in districts, cities, continents etc. Stage and cluster are not preferable in Bulgaria. The use of the word wave has stable tradition and impacts on people. More Bulgarians afraid and the attitude (a fear) is a result of frequent repetition of this word. The association between pandemic with flooding and disaster establishes negative emotions.
